COVID material added This is a course in the application of microeconomic principles to health behavior change including smoking and eating too often and making choices for health care and health insurance. We first focus on consumer behavior and demand for medical services. An important feature of health care is that health care can be considered a capital good. Health insurance is an investment in the consumption of health care. The second part of the course deals with health insurance markets and health care financing. We will discuss health insurance both from the consumer perspective and the firm perspective.
